

To Whom it may concern;

All family courts when deciding custody of children need to assume 50/50 shared parenting. Thank goodness the family courts have seen how much fathers want to be involved in their childrens lives and more and more courts are giving fathers a fair deal. The children are the most important, I have heard of some mothers trying to get full custody even resorting to move to another state. Most mothers are working full time just as fathers and it really takes two committed parents in order to produce well rounded children that are a benefit to society. New Hampshire could and should lead the nation in changing child custody laws. Way to go New Hampshire!!!!
