

Part of getting better courts is to better inform the citizens about the history of our Constitutions.

Part of getting better courts is to re-write and remove the very misleading parts of our court's jury instructions from those instructions. Our National Constitution mentions juries twice in the main body of the Constitution, and three times in the Bill of Rights. Our local jury instructions should more accurately mention why a jury was considered so important in the Federal Constitution. Other than the fact that a jury is repeatedly mentioned in the New Hampshire Constitution, I have not counted how many times a jury is important to the people. The people should be told about the importance of a jury.

Bob Kingsbury